Cracking Interviews:

An interview, in a very broad sense, is a conversation between two or more people where the interviewer attempts to elicit information from the interviewee. Employers use interviewing as a method of conducting research and understanding the experiences of the candidates, so that they can be recruited according to suitable profiles and job responsibilities.

Types of Interviews

- a) Structured interview: In a structured interview, the interviewer asks a set of close-ended questions that have been standardized by the industry and will not deviate or ask clarification on the interviewee's answers. These interviews are conducted when the number of candidates is high and the objective is to screen candidates as per the company's requirements.
- b) Unstructured Interviews:- In an unstructured interview, you may have to answer open-ended questions that can be asked in any order without any fixed schedule. They are more conversational. Almost all interviews, except structured interviews, are of this nature.
- c) One-on-One Interviews:- In an one-to-one interview, the candidate is interviewed in multiple stages, with each interviewer asking questions on a specific area mentioned in the CV. Generally, these stages are categorized as general, technical and operational.
- d) Panel Interviews:- panel interviews give the candidate a chance to interact with representatives from the top management heading different departments, and all at the same time. The interviewee needs to remember that he needs to address everyone in the panel and maintain eye-contact with everyone while answering anyone of the panel's question, as they all are a team.
- e) Group Interviews:- Group interviews are conducted in the process of recruiting team-leaders or employees with either team-leading, work-distributing, and prioritizing qualities. The group needs to distribute responsibilities and give presentations.
- f) Stress Interviews:- stress interviews test a candidate's ability to stay focused under pressure and uncomfortable circumstances, more than anything else. The interviewer could use various intimidating techniques such as asking irrelevant questions, staring silently, not paying attention, and speaking sternly. The candidate is expected to stay calm and professional under all circumstances.

- g) Informational Interviews:- informational interviews are conducted not to select candidates or offer jobs. It is scheduled from the candidate's end by requesting for an interview with the HR of a company, so that he can understand details like the working environment, current processes, job responsibilities, etc.
- h) Competency-Based Interviews: Competency-based interviews check a candidate's skills of performing in a specific hypothetical situation. One needs to have a detailed knowledge of his or her area of expertise to answer the questions that the interviewers will ask.
- i) Assessment Center Interviews:- Assessment Centers are all interviews rolled into one, and as a result, they are carried over two days. The candidate needs to be at the top of his game, and have in-depth knowledge on all spheres of his work.
- j) Telephonic Interviews:- Telephonic interviews are fast replacing traditional "on-venue" interviews due to the logistics and the time they can save. It is much easier for candidates to have a conversation over the phone nowadays, as compared to travelling to a distant place to do the same. Although the obvious advantages of a telephonic interview are many – one being that the person doesn't have to be physically present during the time of the interview – this could also be one of its distinct disadvantages.
- k) Tele-Conferencing (Video Interview)

Tips to Crack Interviews:-

- Market yourself with sincerity and confidence, so that the interviewer knows your strengths and areas of expertise as clearly as possible.
- Give honest, specific and exact answers under every circumstance, as that proves their integrity and truthfulness.
- Listen and think for some time before giving an answer. It gives the impression of a person who takes time to analyze the information.
- Be prepared to answer some intensive behavioral questions. These questions will test a candidate's ability of handling responsibility and resources.
- Be informative but try to convert the interview to a conversation.
- Personality is important. Give a good first Impression:- Your appearance and nonverbal cues play a huge role in creating that image. Smile while greeting the interviewer, offer a firm handshake (be mindful of perspiring palms) and establish eye-contact.

- If you are asked to solve a problem, talk through your process. This will help the interviewer to understand your logical approach towards problem-solving.
- Focus on what value you can add to the company/organisation beyond the job responsibilities. Candidates who manage to convince the interviewer of their contribution to the company beyond the ones mentioned in the job profile are often preferred.
- Use jargons (industry talk) and acronyms. This shows that you are familiar with the industry.
- Answer the questions in a way that showcases your skills. Try to add your talents and recent achievements into your answers in the form of examples to prove your point and eligibility.
- Graduation degrees and good scores undoubtedly matter, but in addition to that, what employers really look for in a candidate is his decision-making skills, communication, team-player attitude and the ability to plan and prioritize work.
- Body Language – Look the interviewer right in the eye while greeting him the first time. By doing so, you project a confident and assertive image but try not to stare. When offered a seat, sit straight instead of slouching. Speak in a clear voice; avoid mumbling. Don't cross your arms and legs. Don't rub your nose or bite lips. Don't slouch or sit on the edge of the chair. This gives a careless impression. Nod when you agree but don't bob your head as that signifies inexperience. Don't sit too close to the interviewer. Allow personal space. Don't look away or turn your face down while answering. Don't use excessive hand movements. Articulate and be expressive but moderately and at desk-level.
- Ex-employers – Never bad-mouth ex-employers.
- Know your Resume – Be ready to discuss anything mentioned in the resume. The interviewers can ask a question on any topic mentioned there. Carry two copies of your CV, one to be presented to the HR and the second one for other referential purposes.

• Keep things at a professional level

For Telephonic interview:-

- Speak loud enough to be heard clearly.
- Let the interviewer do most of the talking, as he will be explaining the instructions initially for you to understand. Also, speaking out of turn could irritate the listener.

- Smile and speak in a conversational manner. Smiling while talking changes the shape of your mouth when you pronounce the words, and this change in tone is easily picked up by the listener.
- Place a notepad, pen, and a copy of your resume near you for reference and jot down important information.
- While attending a telephonic interview, try to be in a place with minimum background noise and interference. Even if it is telephonic, it is advisable to dress the part for the interview. This will help you in maintaining a professional mindset throughout the interview.
- Turn off call-waiting and applications that give beeping notification during calls.

Video Interview:

- Dress up for the part and look professional.
- Try to be in a well-lit area with a suitable background. The ideal background is a white wall or screen.
- Check the internet connection, camera visibility, and microphone audibility well before the interview time.
- Keep a notepad, pen, and copy of the CV near you.
- Inform the people around you to not disturb you for the duration of the interview.
- Keep your phones in silent mode and out of sight to avoid getting distracted.

Preparation Required

- Blue/Black ball-point Pen and plain paper. Carry a plain paper-sheet with you, in case you need to do any calculations. Gel pens and fountain-pens have inks that can spill or soil on contact with water.
- Documents supporting experience and education as per company specifications for verification purposes.
- Prepare Your Answers & Visit the Company's Website
